

Call for Expressions of Interest: Social Media Support for Clinical & Experimental Allergy

A unique opportunity has arisen for BSACI trainees, (or joint trainees working together), to support the Editor of Clinical & Experimental Allergy, Robert Boyle, in developing social media content for the journal. Clinical & Experimental Allergy is the official journal of BSACI, and is a highly prestigious, internationally respected journal that publishes rigorous, high-impact research advancing the science and clinical practice of allergy and immunology.

This role offers a valuable opportunity to gain experience in academic publishing, science communication and digital engagement, while working closely with BSACI to help bridge opportunities to promote journal special issues through the BSACI weekly updates and other member communications. This is a volunteer position that requires a maximum commitment of two hours per week. Trainees with an interest in social media or research dissemination are encouraged to apply by sending in no more than 200 words summarising their relevant experience in relation to the role by Monday 25th May to Sandie@bsaci.org with a CV.